

“I want to make something that not only changes things, but changes things without screwing everything else up.”—p. 28

Front

- 2 From the editor

THE DOWNLOAD

- 11 The consequences of e-commerce, geoeengineering bans, Cell Painting, better tsunami detection, and reasons for climate optimism. Plus, this month's job title of the future: Director of Species Restoration

EXPLAINED

- 20 Explained: How do lithium-ion EV batteries work?
By Patrick Sisson

PROFILE

- 22 Tackling diversity in Germany's tech capital
Nakeema Stefflbauer is bringing women from underrepresented groups into the Berlin tech scene.
By Gouri Sharma

The design issue

25 What is design?

When we unpack its current meaning, we may find that we want—and need—to retool the word yet again. BY NICHOLAS DE MONCHAUX

28 A postmortem on design thinking

Empathy failed to fix the world. What now?
BY REBECCA ACKERMANN

36 Drugs by design

AI automation is being deployed throughout the drug development pipeline, opening up the possibility of cheaper pharmaceuticals on a faster timeline. BY WILL DOUGLAS HEAVEN

42 Electromagnetic ruins

Ohio's ancient mounds and the future of archaeology.
BY GEOFF MANAUGH

52 Prosthetics that break the mold

Prosthetics designers are pushing the limits of functionality and aesthetics to help people feel more comfortable in their own skin. BY JOANNA THOMPSON

60 The return of Lake Texcoco

Mexico canceled a $13 billion airport. It's now spending nearly $1 billion to turn it back into a swamp. Does this controversial wilderness point to the future of ecological design? BY MATTHEW PONSFORD

Back

72 Rust never sleeps

How a ragtag international group of coders brought a much-loved and fast-growing new programming language into the world.
By Clive Thompson

78 Power pop

K-pop fans are getting political, using the campaign techniques they've perfected promoting their favorite bands online. By Soo Youn

82 Welcome to the strange, surprising world of Ultima Online

What a decades-old virtual kingdom can teach us about the future of the metaverse.
By John-Clark Levin

ARCHIVE

- 88 Graphic designer Jacqueline Casey helped define MIT's distinctive visual style.

Cover illustration by Israel Vargas